

1. Regions (Biomes/Continents)

- Desert-By day, the desert burns with heat capable of melting metal; without special protection, it can scorch your skin. By night, it becomes the coldest, most despicable place, with temperatures plummeting to -110°C. Predators emerge from the shadows. Only the mystic Blue Flame, a rare fire obtainable by the truly pure of heart, can protect against the extremes. Those who attempt to wield it without purity fall to the Abyss. The sun glows red above the endless sands, and storms whip the desert, slicing anyone caught unprotected.
- Jungle-A mystic land filled with temples and pyramids, this is the main Aztec-inspired region. The capital, Mayary, shines with lights that reflect its cultural impact; temples rise toward the sky, and roads are paved with luminous dust. Surrounding towns share a similar aesthetic. At the heart of the jungle lies a sacred cave with pure water capable of purifying one's heart. Beneath it, a crystal called Aquastal stores immense energy, powering the city and its towns. The jungle's borders, where it collides with the desert, are home to monsters and fragments of the Abyss, making the area extremely dangerous.
- Forest-The main Japanese-inspired region, with the capital Toshio (としお) — a city blending ancient traditions and modern technology. Neon lights illuminate the streets, water channels flow throughout the city, and pollution is nonexistent. At its heart lies the Totori Waterfall (ととり), its pink-red neon waters a potent energy source. Drinking it is deadly: your body will disintegrate into pure energy. The waterfall powers the capital, while surrounding towns enjoy the forest's safety — demons and Abyss remnants rarely venture here. At the borders with the Abyss, massive walls equipped with missiles and heat rays defend the land.
- Beach/Coast-The most disputed region on the continent, bordered by the Jungle on one side and the Forest on the other. This area is historically significant, as the first newborns were raised here. The sea is salty, reminiscent of the Atlantic Ocean. Between the divided zones lies the Mictlan, a no-man's land where travelers and merchants gather to trade—sometimes illegally. Danger is rare, but at night, the sea glows with a beautiful neon blue, illuminating whales, fish, and other creatures. It is the perfect time for fishing, or for secrets to be exchanged under the glowing waves.
- Dark Lands (Abyss)-The shadow of the past, the darkness of the world, the graveyard of fallen gods. A plague began in 0 A.A. when a monk cast a spell to damn the continent, opening a portal to the Internal Abyss (Hell) and the External Abyss, known as the Dark Lands—the home of demons, fallen temples, and ruined cities. Before the plague, the main lands of both factions enjoyed excellent political relations, but the Abyss corrupted everything. From Toshio, one can see the fallen ruins of Kyoto, where the plague began. Dark grass, blood-red waterfalls, and glowing crimson trees spread the damnation dust that corrupts anyone who inhales it. Both factions patrol these lands, as the plague extends meter by meter each day. Scientists tirelessly search for a cure, but have only achieved temporary recession, forcing both factions to make a fragile bargain to contain the Abyss.

2. Cultures & Subcultures

Cultures & Subcultures:

Japanese-inspired: Hikari no Senshi (光の戦士)

The Light Warriors, a faction born from the ashes of Tokyo where the city of Toshio now stands. They maintain a direct connection with ancient Japanese traditions. Respectful and orderly, yet cold and cautious with strangers, their culture values discipline, honor, and cleanliness above all.

Aztec-inspired: Ishty

Descendants of the ancient Aztecs, the Ishty are respectful but fierce, performing sacrifices in sacred temples to maintain the balance and cure of the land. Their traditions and rituals connect them deeply with their ancestral roots.

Mixed Subculture: Tyrobi

Born from parents of different factions, the Tyrobi mostly inhabit the beach towns or the Mictlan (no-man's land). They are merchants and traders, dealing in both legal and illegal goods. At night, their markets come alive with neon lights, creating a lively yet dangerous atmosphere.

3. Conflicts Between Cultures

Both factions were once united under a single kingdom, ruled by two kings: one from the Ishty and one from the Hikari no Senshi (光の戦士). Harmony reigned until a monk appeared, casting spells on the Ishty's sacred temple. The Ishty king believed the Light Warriors were responsible, and slowly distrust spread. Some people fought, others tried to keep the peace, but everything began to unravel when the plague first corrupted the Ishty king. In his corrupted state, he assassinated the King of the Hikari no Senshi, sparking widespread conflict. This murder ignited a series of battles, eventually escalating into a full-scale war between the factions, which in turn fueled the spread of the Abyss, now known as the Dark Lands

4. Technology & Fantasy Mix

Ancient Technology:

- Obsidian weapons forged with mystical energy.
- Pyramids containing energy cores, powering ancient machines and sacred rituals.

Modern/Futuristic Technology:

- Energy shields that can withstand Abyss attacks.
- Blasters and energy blades used by soldiers and elite warriors.

Magic & Spiritual Powers:

- Shin-Nahualli abilities, a form of spiritual energy inherited by newborns.
- Sacred rituals that can heal, purify, or destroy.
- Spirit animals that guide, protect, or empower individuals.

5. People & Society

Normal Population:

Ordinary people live structured lives, working according to their education and careers to maintain the economy. Children attend school for 8 hours daily, and 4 hours on non-working days.

Newborns / Saisei sa re ta (再生された):

Special humans born with the potential to control Fire, Earth, Cold, and, very rarely, Time. These individuals are trained as soldiers to patrol the Dark Lands. Their power is measured by a system called tsuko (つこ):

- Fire: 10–200 tsuko (10–50 untrained)
- Earth: 10–220 tsuko (10–70 untrained)
- Cold: 50–340 tsuko (50–120 untrained; often generals)
- Time: 120–560 tsuko (120–230 untrained; never seen alive)
- “Dark” or Abyss Ones: purely mythical, rumored 900–? tsuko, even the Abyss Dragon is measured in tsuko.

Social Structure (both factions):

Once united, both factions share social roles:

Light Workers (normal workers) → Heavy Workers (mining, building, etc.) → Soldiers → Generals → Newborns → Politicians → Emperor

No one is considered less than others; roles reflect discipline and responsibility.

Philosophy:

Both cultures value discipline, respect, and purity, guiding everyday life and governance.

6. Animals & Creatures

Natural Fauna:

Jaguars, eagles, wolves, and other animals inhabit the world, each infused with spiritual energy, giving them unique abilities or mystical appearances.

Abyss Creatures:

Demons, dragons, and hybrids roam the Dark Lands, remnants of the Abyss plague. They are dangerous, often unpredictable, and serve as both enemies and trials for adventurers.

Sacred Beasts:

Guardians, mounts, and spirit animals that protect temples, guide travelers, or empower those deemed worthy. Their presence is rare but highly respected across cultures.

7. Literal Description of the World

From a satellite view, the world resembles a single supercontinent, much like Pangea. Yet this landmass is fractured—not by oceans, but by cracks leading to portals of the Internal Abyss. Elite squads are deployed to close these rifts before they spread further. The surrounding sea encloses this mono-continent, glowing at night with ethereal blue light.

Across the land lie the ruins of ancient human cities: Tokyo, Kyoto, Moscow, Munich, Paris, Sydney, Mexico City, Buenos Aires, Ottawa, Las Vegas, and more—silent reminders of a forgotten age. Mount Fuji now stands as the greatest volcano since the eruption of Popocatepetl in 3025 B.A., reshaping the land with fire.

The biomes do not change abruptly; rather, they fade into one another, degrading as one crosses into the next. The air itself shifts with each place: dense in deserts and Dark Lands, refreshing in forests, warm in jungles, and suffocating at night in the wastelands, where even breathing becomes a struggle.

Rivers flow like veins across the continent, all converging into the legendary Totori (ととり) Waterfall. Its waters alter color depending on their region: glowing red-pink in Toshio, crystal clear in Mayart, and luminescent blue at the coasts during the night. From space, the world shines like a living, glowing orb.

One of its greatest mysteries is the Blue Flame—an eternal fire with paradoxical properties. It warms eternally, yet can also freeze depending on the will of a pure heart. The flame reveals hidden symbols, creates oxygen in barren lands, and stands as a symbol of divine purity. It can be forged only through an impossible ritual: pure water mixed with aquastal, the waters of Totori, the blood of the Abyss, and the sacred bones of a Guardian, all compressed under immense pressure. Because of this, it is most often found in the depths of the glowing sea, five kilometers off the coast.
